

Social Platform Taxonomy v0.8

Our preliminary taxonomy of social platforms to expand our thinking.

Bundled  All-in-one platforms combining multiple social features (messaging, feeds, groups, events) into a single integrated experience. Think Facebook's comprehensive approach.	Resource sharing  Peer-to-peer platforms for sharing physical assets (cars, homes, tools) within a community framework, emphasising collaborative consumption.	Location  Platforms centred on physical places, check-ins, and location-based social discovery. Users share where they are and connect with others nearby.	Creator platform  Spaces designed for content creators to publish, monetise, and build audiences around their work. Emphasises creator tools and audience relationships.	Dating  Matchmaking platforms focused on romantic connections, using profiles and algorithms to facilitate relationships between potential partners.
Networking  Professional or career-focused platforms designed for building work relationships, job searching, and business connections.	Forum  Discussion-based platforms organised by topics or threads where users engage in long-form conversations and Q&A.	Messaging  Communication-focused platforms for direct, private conversations between individuals or small groups.	Groups  Platforms enabling smaller communities to form around shared interests, with tools for collective organisation and communication.	Video sharing  Platforms for uploading, watching, and engaging with video content, from short clips to long-form productions.
Social marketplace  Social commerce platforms where users buy, sell, and trade goods or services within a community context.	Community  Niche platforms built around specific shared interests, hobbies, or identities where members connect over common passions, e.g., Fishbrain for fishing enthusiasts.	Microblogging  Short-form content platforms where users post brief updates, thoughts, or links in chronological feeds.	Photo sharing  Platforms for uploading and sharing still images with social features built around visual content and photography.	Events  Platforms for discovering, organising, and coordinating gatherings, meet-ups, and activities. Connects people around shared experiences.
